Dear Colleague,

How much would you be willing to pay to build a system that would enable you to dynamically leverage learning and knowledge resources throughout the Federal government to boost your employees performance? What if we told you that such a system exists today . . . and will cost you nothing! How is this possible? Some of your Federal colleagues have formed a partnership to create an exciting, innovative learning network that does all of this for you. And this network is available to all Federal agencies.

You are cordially invited to attend a briefing and demonstration at the Federal Learning Technology Showcase, May 22, 9:00am to noon in the Strom Auditorium of the Richard B. Russell Federal Building, to learn how you can immediately begin to use this new Federal network to benefit your agency. The new Federal learning network features:

- A comprehensive, searchable electronic database of Federal-specific training
- Access to a fully-equipped, Internet-ready computer learning laboratory
- An industry-wide, standardized process for cataloging and retrieving institutional knowledge and learning
- Information about how to contribute to and benefit from a Government-wide repository of learning objects.

Be among the first to learn about these exciting, cutting-edge technology learning systems, standards and services now available to all Federal agencies. Program sponsors include:
